It is presumed that the time has come for them to erect a very nice, commodious church structure.

The Omaha World-Herald gives in the following paragraph a glimpse at one phase of city life; we suppose the man mentioned is one who for many vears lived in this vicinity: "Belle Craycroft, alias Belle Costello, a white woman, who some time ago married Henry Calloway, a negro, and has lived with him since, this afternoon filed a complaint in police court charging Callo-

-Friday morning at 5:20, an east bound freight train was wrecked at small bridge one mile east of Grand Island. Spikes had been removed so that the track spread. The engine pass ed over safely but a dozen cars were thrown off. Robert Gentleman, (a cousin of Mrs. D. C. Kavanaugh of this city) was engineer on the train: when he saw what was wrong, he reversed his engine and jumped from the cab, mashing his heel; nobody was seriously hurt.

Sunday night at 1:30 an attemp was made to wreck a train on the Union Pacific near and east of Chapman station. A tramp who heard the miscreants at work, but who supposed then that they were railroad workmen, approached the party, but was fired upon by them. He nade his escape and notified the operator at Chapman, who held No. 17, the east bound freight, and saved it from being wrecked. Spikes had been pulled and two rails removed.
